But It's Drifter Tipsy Who's Lucky-Sober, It's Another Story-Two Bets He Made on the Big Race at Morris Park-One He Didn't Remember and One a Pal Forgot. The lucklest man in New York is Drifter, tipsy. Drifter, sober, is another proposition, but all his friends agree that with the greater part of a few cold bottles under his waistcoat Drifter has a hunch that can't be beaten. If there had been any doubt about it, the Metropolitan proved it.

Drifter, sober, had his own ideas about the Metropolitan Handicap. The sum of those same ideas was Star Bright, and Drifter being a man of courage backed his opinion with good money to a modest amount. Having his own troubles in his own line of business on race day, he did not go down to the trace himself, but entrusted the money he wished to venture on the horse of his choice to a friend who was free to enjoy himself among racehorses on Saturdays. This was on the evening before the race. Then Drifter started homeward counting the chickens he expected the speculation to hatch.

Now Drifter, having many friends, it was natural that on the way home he should meet a few of those same friends. The thing that was a little out of the ordinary was that one of the friends should just have happened to make the hit of his life in the boom market in Wall Street, and to be celebrating his sucocco in a manner proportionate to the size of it. Drifter, with his salary in his pocket, felt happy on general principles, as he always did, and therefore they all celebrated.

The result was that it had been daylight for several hours when Drifter, caring for no man, rolled into the apartment house he honored with his patronage and bumped into a very sober friend coming out. "Hello! Goo 'nuff." whooped Drifter. "Owe you fi' doll'sh lash week. Here y' are!"

He stripped off a bill from the remains of his roll and handed it over. His friend looked him over critically, then propped him up against the letter boxes and held him there "See here, Drifter," said his friend, "I don't want that five now, but you're an honest man. First man, by gosh, I've lent five to in ten years who's remembered it within six months. Now I'm going to do you good turn. Are you on in the race to-day? "Raceh? Sure!" hiccoug ed the man who had been celebrating in advance, "Go" only thing that'll-hic-ever come outer-hic boxsh-Shtar Bri'. Only horsh got chansh Back 'm. Goo' thing. Bri' Shtar. Thash me. "Yes you are-nit," responded the friend.

"How in blazes is it that you always get 'em wrong. Drifter? Good Lord, man, haven't you heard it? But of course you haven't well, there's only one real live horse in that race to-day, an' that's Banastar. Do you get it? Banastar. But you'll never know it when you wake "

"Ratsh!" murmured Drifter, sleepfly, "Shtar -sure thing-month up rifter's friend looked for a minute as if d let him go. Then he thought again and Brit-sure thing—monish up Drifter's friend looked for a minute as if he'd let him so. Then he thought again and held on a little longe.

"Now, Drifter, old man," said he, "I'm going to save you from yourself. You're going to make some money for once in your life. Now give me a good stake and I'll put it on for you. Then we'll talk about that five later. Now if you don't, I'll just put a ten of my own on for you and if we lose I'll add it to the five you owe me, and by Cæsar, if you don't pay I'll sue you.

"All ri". murmured Drifter, too far gone to protest. "You take tha' view. Nothin' i'me to do. Here!"

He selected a bill that represented twice the amount he had staked on Star Bright and handed it over. His friend took it and vanished, while Drifter climbed the stairs and promptly forgot all about the transaction in a dreandess slumber, which latsed for the few hours till the hall boy awakened him, as it seemed to him, by pounding him with shammer on the inside of his skull. It was a wabbiy Drifter who veiled for an "Extra" and having seen the head in big type at the top of the racing news received the condolences of his sequaintances. It was a very disconsolate Drifter whom his friend of the morning, bursting into the office from the select poolroom the police had not ver discovered, thumped in the ribs with a mighty thump that sent him half out of his char.

"Great Scottl" said Drifter, "Killa fellow by degrees if you're going to. What's up?" echoed his friend. "Oh, Lord! This is the man I've provided for for a month at least and he asks me what's up. Here take

This is the man I've provided for foat least and he asks me what's up To Drifter's astonished gaze he produced a wad of greenbacks that was as big round as a wooden rolling pin and proceeded to set apart a large section.

"Bill." gasped Drifter. "Break it gently.
Tell me what I've done."

Then the friend explained Drifter sent out the office how to the corner, called in more

This is Jones—yes. Jones, down at Morris Park. I've only just remembered that littile commission of yours. Clean forgot it, old man, in the excitement over the big race but I couldn't have got near the bookies my way, and you're lucky as it turns out. Now I want to know what I'll do with it. The last race is just called. Have you anything you'd like me to put it on or shall I bring it back?

"Bring it back?" eeneed briller "Spend it! Give it to a bunchback! Burn it! No, bring it along quick and we'll buy a few botties with it. No. I'm sober, good-by."

"Now, said Drifter to bis assembled pala when he had told the tale. "What do you think of that?"

This is why Drifter's friends assert emphatically that Drifter, tipsy as a hungh, can't be beaten. In which Drifter agrees.

CAME FROM ITALY TO KILL HER.

An Italian Girl, Threatened by Her Jealous Suitor, Applies for a Warrant. ROCHESTER, N. F., May 18 -In her application for a warrant to-day Gioseppa

Leon, a fair Italian girl, 23 years old, alleged that Grazio Lione, the man she wanted ar rested, had come all the way from Italy to kill her. When the girl returned to her home 122 Frankfort street, last night, she found Lione pacing up and down in front of the house. When she was opposite him he shouted in his own language. "Groseppa, I have come all these miles to kill you." The girl ran screaming into the house and did not leave until noon, to-day, when she applied for the warrant. The police learned that Lione landed in New York last Saturday and came at once to Rochester. The girl knew him in Italy and is certain he intends taking her life, as he is fealous.
